- OLSCHEWSKI, Dipl.Ing. ?. [from ADI(K) summaries (10.45): During the first 4 years of the war he was engaged on ionospheric research for the Luftwaffe in Berlin, and subsequently at evacuation sites in Southern Germany. A paper on his work in this field had been passed to ADI(K). Latterly concerned with the development of the "V-Steuerkopf" - an automatic device for use in jet fighters. Its use for V-weapons was also projected. The apparatus, said to have a range of 50 km consisted of a search receiver operating on 3-5 cm. which swept through the frequency band used by H2S and H2X and automatically tuned itself to any loud signal picked up. On receipt of the signal (say from a master bomber) the receiver commenced to operate an auto-pilot by which the aircraft was then flown to home in on the master bomber. This was done by means of separate VHF R/T equipment. When range was closed to 50/70 meters canon fire opened up automatically. The living pilot then switched off the "V-Steuerkopf" and resumed control in order to take evasive action. A modification said to be under way was the incorporation of a radio proximity fuse fitted to some form of rocket missile which would direct itself in to the vicinity of the master bomber or bomber stream and there explode. Development of the apparatus was started in mid-1943 and reached full production in January 1945. Work also commenced in April at Schmargendorff and at the Blaupunktwerke, but owing to the disruption of the Berlin radio industry only 20 sets were produced up to the time of the capitulation. The fate of these sets is unknown but is believed that they may have fallen into Russian hands.]

had to return to Germany. Then joined Flettner in the capacity of liaison official between the design staff and the test pilots and was one of those responsible for the development of the Fl 265 and Fl 282. In addition he developed the autogyro principle for marine craft and drew up plans for a six ton speed boat which had two 1.30 metre diameter rotors beneath the hull to lift the boat on to the surface of the water. Tests on this were carried out in the Hamburg high speed tank and a film of the test believed to have been available. Similarly, the same idea was also used in conjunction with midget u-boats, the rotors submerging the vessel and re-surfacing without the necessity for using diving tanks. In Jan. 1942, with the cessation of autogyro development in Germany, he joined Dr.Kramer of the Ruhrstahl A.G. as Versuchsleiter, working on the X-4, etc.]
